An old man living in Alaska was sad. All of his friends and family were long gone. He began to wonder if he should leave the village and start a new life somewhere else. "If I lived someplace new, at least I won't be around all these memories anymore," he thought. But he also worried, "If I paddle away to another village and the people there see that I'm alone, they may think that I had to run away from my home village because I was accused of some disgraceful thing." Instead, he thought that he would just go off and live in the forest by himself.

The poor man was so sad, traveling alone in the woods, it actually occurred to him to go to the bears and just let the bears kill him. The bear village was by a large salmon creek, so he went over to the creek early in the morning until he found a bear trail, and he lay down across the end of it. Question 22

Once upon a time there was a very rich man who lived with his three daughters. The two older daughters laughed at anyone who did not dress as well as they did. If the two of them were not resting at home, they were out shopping for as many fine dresses and hats as they could carry home.

The youngest daughter, Beauty, loved to read. "Your nose is always in a book," her two older sisters said. They laughed. "No one will want you! Look at your hair. You look like a servant girl!" Beauty did not know why they were so mean. But she said nothing.

One day, the father got some bad news. He had spent all of his money on a ship that he sent out to sea for trade. Now he learned the ship was gone! Everything on it was lost. All at once, the rich father became as poor as poor could be.

The family could no longer stay in their big house. The fine house, its fine tables and chairs, and all of their fine things, had to be sold.

All the father had left was a little hut, deep in the woods. So that is where he and his three daughters had to move.
